She Crosses Ocean To Keep Troth Of Forty Years Ago

MRS. BESSIE WESSON AND THE REV. JOHN ROGERS

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 12.—Love bridging a 40 year chasm has brought from far away across the ocean a light hearted bride for the suitor of her youth, though he is now gray haired and white mustached. In the life story of Mrs. Bessie Wesson, of Cornwall, England, and the Rev. John Rogers, of Metomset, Ill., are found the essentials for a truly pathetic, interesting and plighted eternal troth, little thinking last chapter.

John Rogers left England when he was 19 years old, bound for America, there to make his fortune and to send for his boyhood's love, Bessie. That was 40 years ago. The rosy cheeked Cornish girl, a lass of 18, bade him goodbye and good cheer, while they plighted eternal troth, little thinking destiny would part them nearly half a century.

Something went wrong with their correspondence. Either the mails miscarried or their letters were wrongly addressed. At least the young immigrant received no replies to the letters he wrote back to England. Finally he reached Metomset, Ill., obtained work in a store there and joined the Methodist church. There he met the daughter of a clergyman. Failure to hear from England only served as a spur to make him work harder, and in time he was enabled to enter college and finish studies for the ministry.

Shortly after his graduation, having given up the old hope in despair, he became the fiancé of the clergyman's daughter. Within two weeks after he announced the engagement a letter arrived from Cornwall, Bessie wanted to know why she had not heard from him. John Rogers had given his word to marry another and did not turn back.

A year ago his wife died. Recently he wrote to Cornwall inquiring after his former fiancé. He learned she was alive, a widow and alone. He wrote and she promised to come to this country.

Mr. Rogers cabled her to cross on the steamer Haverford, of the American line, to Philadelphia, and to watch for an elderly man wearing a bow of bright red ribbon in the lapel of his coat. As though Fate were still conspiring against them a halfscore elderly men were at the pier, all wearing red bows. But the eleventh was John Rogers, and Bessie and John were soon in each other's arms. When smiles had chased away the tears the reunited pair hurried away to find the Rev. George H. Bickley, who had promised to celebrate the belated wedding.
